→ The "Bridge Function"

- 2 distinct ^{complementary} types of reality - the ^{west} inherent & the ^{east} introduced
- The inherent reflects the fact that we are born into an inherent system, an inherent set of circumstances. What is inherent in the system of nature (the human condition) is to be, in part, simply accepted. ^{constants boundary conditions}
- person; one (as a human being, a partnership, or a corporation) that is recognized by law as the subject of rights and duties 1: Human Being, Individual
- emergent evolution - a biological and philosophical theory that new characters and qualities (as life and consciousness) appear in the evolutionary process at more complex organizational levels (as that of the molecule, the cell, and the organism) which cannot be predicted solely by studying less complex levels of organization but which are determined by a rearrangement of preexistent entities (conversion)
- entity ^{n, pl. ties} [existing thing, coined of esse to be - m. @ IS] 1a: BEING, EXISTENCE esp, independent, separate, or self-contained existence by the existence of a thing as contrasted with its attributes 2: something that has separate and distinct existence and objective or conceptual reality → legal: having a formal status derived from law or law without a basis in actual fact: TITULAR (a corporation is a legal but not a real person) > legal fictional <

Fellow map-maker... ref. Scott Peck

- Systems analysis - cite Franklin Covey - "Organizations are perfectly aligned to get the results they get."

→ What is introduced by human kind through our choices, our inherent "state of affairs" is not necessarily to be simply accepted. This is in large part because our "state of affairs" is malleable. We are, collectively, architects of reality.

- If I accept this reality, the current "state of human affairs", even though I do not embrace it, then I passively reinforce it. If I do not become part of (instrumental in) the solution ("course correction"), then I remain part of the problem ("Status Quo"). This is why, when I hear a statement like, "To be practical, you must accept this reality" I strongly disagree. It is truer said that the "current state of human affairs" is what we choose "as" our reality. Truer in the sense that it assigns responsibility and accountability. The introduced portion of reality is what we choose it to be. Due Portion
